ROSE / OPOL WINE

By far the most popular method of making quality rosé, limited skin maceration. is essentially exactly what the name describes. Since color is held in a grape's skins, the red grapes are crushed and the juice is left in contact with the skins, just like a red wine would be made. However, the skins are left to soak only for a limited amount of time; depending on the desired style of rosé, this can last anywhere from six to 48 hours. The longer the maceration, the darker and more richly flavored the rosé.
